A TRIBUTE

*T*HOUGH Hollins has made many changes during the last year, she acknowledges with the deepest gratitude her debt to those who have served her in the past.

It is to two members of this group that the Student Body of 1932 - 1933 offers tribute: Miss Agnes Terrell and Miss Betty G. Dickinson.

Miss Terrell first joined the Hollins faculty in the session of 1881-1882. With the exception of two years, spent in Mississippi, she taught at Hollins continually until her resignation in June, 1932. In 1891 Miss Terrell became head of the History Department.

Miss Dickinson served as Assistant Secretary and Treasurer of the College from 1903 to 1932.

During their time at Hollins "Miss Agnes" and "Miss Betty" have endeared themselves to many generations of Hollins girls. Their years of faithful service are a challenge to us all.

THE COLLEGE

ONE

A NEW ERA

FOUNDED upon an ideal, the history of Hollins has been a procession of dramatic events through almost a century of changing conditions. It is in this year, 1932, however, that she enters a new era. This new era was ushered in by two significant events. On August 1, 1932, the College and its property was given by its owners, debt free, to a public Board of Trustees. In this generous act the owners, descendants of Charles Lewis Cocke, the Founder of the College, were actuated by an inherent idealism and by an inflexibility of purpose that have ever marked the life of Hollins.

The second event in the advent of this new era followed closely when, on December 1, 1932, the College was made a member of the Southern Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges, and was accorded a recognition that would not have been possible except for the altruism and purpose of the owners in the transferring of the College from private to public ownership.

Membership in the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools in the Southern States carries with it approval of academic standing, administrative policies, financial condition and other important and interesting features involved in the maintenance and development of a college, and of the approval of these things we were consciously proud. However, when the announcement of these events came, the strong surge of feeling that swept over the campus had its origin, we believe, in something deeper and stronger. In it there was a sense of culmination, the consummation of long years of a living and vigorous idealism, a vindication, one might call it, of a concentration on a definite purpose which obliterates self and, above all, a profound feeling of gratitude. Because it was the dream of the Founder, and the desire of those who followed him in the developing of this College, to see it perpetuated, this magnanimous course was taken. Such a course meant the safeguarding of the attainments of the past and security against the vicissitudes of times to come and for this decision all who love Hollins were grateful.

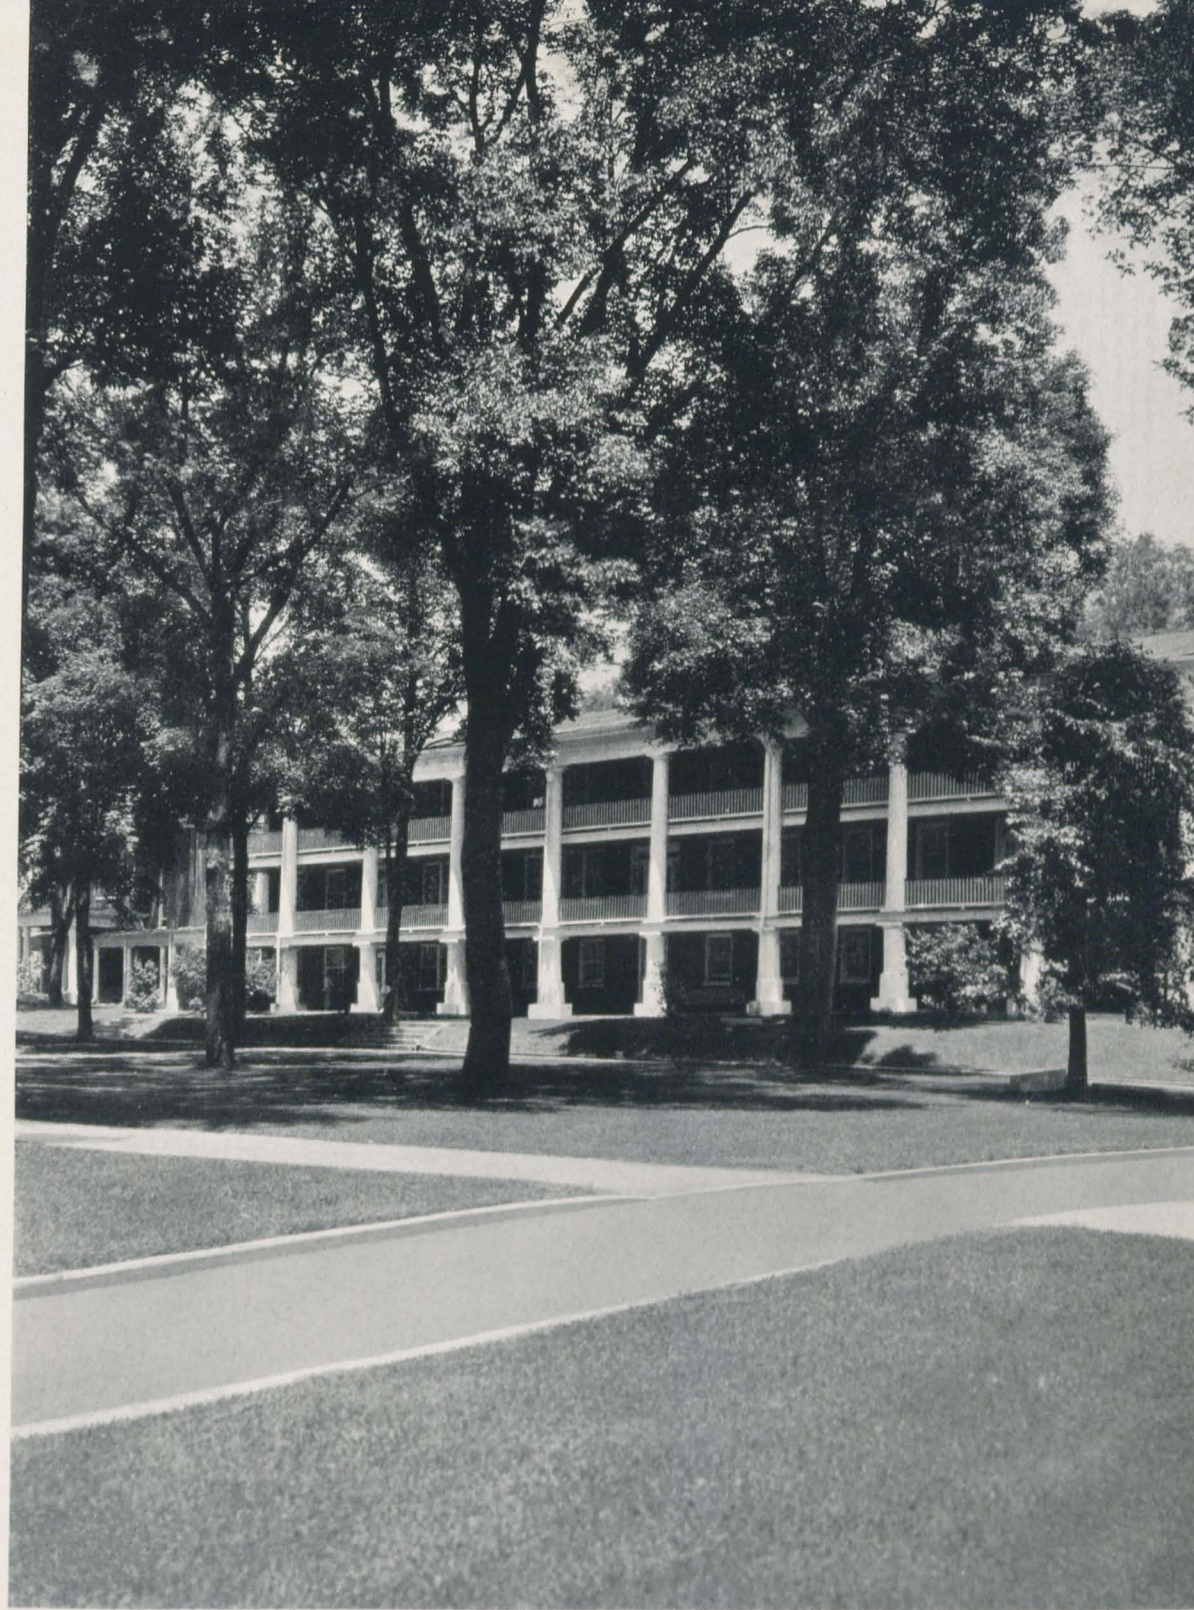

Furthermore, this sense of gratitude reached out as we recalled other groups that have woven their threads into this enduring fabric. First, that long line of professors and instructors of the past, as well as those of to-day, who have contributed without measure of their genius in the building of this College. We remembered, too, the splendid and significant landmarks in the history of our campus to be attributed to continuing generations of students who have thoughtfully created for Hollins an enviable community life. Nor did we fail, moreover, to realize, also in gratitude, that the future of Hollins would be as effective in this new era as in the past, for as the new Board of Trustees assumes its duties as administrators, we are happy in the knowledge that their willingness to serve Hollins comes from a clear understanding and fine appreciation of its history, policies and traditions.

However, if we are to record our new status in terms of gratitude and appreciation, must not this record carry with it a new pledge? Shall we not, then, turn to those qualities that have been life-giving in the past and establish them firmly as our foundation in this new era? Let there be, therefore, new consecration to idealism in learning and in life. Let there be that same inflexible determination to achieve lasting values for our own and future generations and, above all, let there be a courageous desire to test our purpose by the achievements of those who have founded, built and preserved Hollins.

Senior Class Prophecy

"Oh," said The Rabbit.
"Oh what?" asked Panky.
"Just 'Oh'," said The Rabbit. He sat quite still and contemplated. He frowned and his whiskers twitched. Panky sat very, very still, for The Rabbit was wise and The Rabbit was thinking. Finally he spoke:
"It is very strange. Even I cannot understand it."
"What?" Panky was curious.
"Years ago," began The Rabbit, ignoring his mental inferior, "Years ago, back in the grandfather period, back in the days of grandfathers' grandfathers, which was a long time ago . . ."
"How long?" interrupted Panky.
"My dear fellow, a long time is . . . well, just a long time. There, you have it! At any rate, we Rabbits were very happy here in Utopia. The Utopians had all died of race suicide. I remember a certain grandfather of mine telling me about it. They died because they had nothing else to do. Life was very dull. And since that time we Rabbits have been very happy here. We Rabbits—and, of course, others." He added condescendingly.
"Like we Pankies?" inquired Panky.
"Yes, yes, quite," The Rabbit answered. He was silent again. Then he shook his head sadly.
"It is strange, exceedingly strange." Panky wanted to ask what again, but The Rabbit looked as if he would say some more. He did:
"To-day, strolling in another part of Utopia, just strolling along waiting for something to turn up I came upon . . ." He paused, wiped his brow in an unstrung sort of way, pulled himself together, and continued.
"What?" squealed Panky.
"People!" announced The Rabbit. "Yes, people. They have come here to Utopia to live. I was very indignant, dear Panky, very indignant indeed and I determined to put a stop to their meddling immediately. But, dear Panky, they are a most determined lot. I approached one young person. She introduced herself as the philosopher, Margaret Weed.
" 'And who,' I inquired, 'are all these people with you?'
" 'Oh, they are the Class of '33 from Hollins,' she answered. Panky, my dear fellow, do you know who the 'Class of '33' is and what is Hollins? I regret to say I seem to have forgotten just what it all is." The Rabbit was definitely losing his assurance.
"No," answered Panky. Then he added hurriedly, "but then I don't know very much, dear Rabbit."
"That was what she said, anyway. But she said more. 'We are hypocritical. Life as we have seen it lived about us is futile and vain. We have, even in our exalted state, lost all interests common to the Class of '33. Fan-tan, nail polish, Eddie Cantor, movements, and Senior Forums have been tried and have been found wanting. We have read Schopenhauer, Chaucer, D. H. Lawrence and Thorne Smith, but we found no peace. Then we read More and Sidney. And so,' she announced triumphantly, 'we, a self-sufficient group, an intellectual group, a hypocritical group, have set up our own Utopia.'"
"Do you . . ." Panky began.
"No, I don't," The Rabbit interrupted. "I never heard of those. But come along and you shall see for yourself."
It did not take The Rabbit and Panky long to reach the "Class of '33." As they entered the town they were startled by a very peculiar noise, an "mmmm" sort of noise.
"Mmmm, mmmm," it went. Panky took The Rabbit's paw just in case. But it was only Margaret Adkins, sitting very quietly on a curb stone, "mmmm" to herself. As she sat there a figure glided toward them, gazing off into nothing.
"Who's that?" Panky whispered. Adkie stopped "mmmm."
"Just Dawson in her usual trance. Don't startle her. Mmmmmmm."
Someone came up behind them quite suddenly.
"Let me introduce myself. I am A. E. Phillips, the official greeter of Utopia. Would you like to take a conducted tour of our city?" she beamed, and taking them by the arm, hurried them along. Before they had gone very far strains of music came to them, and looking toward a velvety lawn they saw E. Young in the garb of a nymph, tripping lightly o'er the grass. Kate Holland was accompanying her on the piano, while Lelia Hornor trilled "I Love You Truly." Amaryllis McCarley followed on the heels of E. in a dance of spring, her feet and arms flailing the air like a huge bird.

"What—" began The Rabbit, but A. E. was up on her job.

"That is the goddess of Pan with her followers," she explained. "And if you look carefully you'll see Jerry Garber behind the piano." They looked and there she was, her fingers in her ears, muttering over and over, "Your harmony is wrong! Your harmony is wrong!" As the three listened to Jerry, Hannah Reeves came up, dressed in Nun's grey. She drew them aside.

"What they need is a black velvet drop with pale, amber floods," she argued, gesticulating violently.

"No they don't." Dot Perkins had joined the group. "If they would just come to song practice at 5:30 the whole thing would be solved." Evelyn Woody and Mozelle Dalton strolled up.

"This tripe," Mozelle began without being asked, "wants life. It's dead!"

"Ha cha cha!" Evelyn agreed and they shagged out onto the greensward in pursuit of E. and Amaryllis.

"Do they always act this way?" The Rabbit asked A. E.

"Oh, yes, of course. But do come and see our government. You know we pride ourselves on our government."

"No, I didn't know," objected The Rabbit. A. E. gazed at him wonderingly.

"What! Never heard of our government? Come along!" And she yanked up the two bewildered things and flew down the street to the courthouse. Just before they reached the building A. E. quickly shoved The Rabbit behind her. He objected violently. This was no way to treat a distinguished visitor!

"Ssh!" A. E. whispered. "It's Dot Huyett. She's looking for rabbits to dissect. So The Rabbit was indeed very quiet until this Hunter-After-Rabbits had passed on by. Proceeding into the courtyard A. E. pointed proudly to a statue.

"That is Natalie Smith. She sits there all day as our Sphinx here in Utopia. And the young lady approaching us from the courthouse is Page Rudd." Before The Rabbit could ask who was Page Rudd that smiling person tapped them all gently on the arm.

"What we need is a Peace Parade. It would be as if oil were poured on our troubled water."

"But I thought," The Rabbit began.

"Ah, yes, you thought we were peaceful and happy. We love each other dearly but occasionally we do quarrel so." And she went on out into the street to round up recruits for her parade.

Entering the courthouse A. E. led The Rabbit and the wide-eyed Panky down a long hall. They passed an open door and looking in saw Ginnie Messmore rapping away aimlessly at an adding machine. An officer of the law hurried down the hall.

"Please keep this door shut when you are noise-making," she snapped and passed on.

"That," whispered A. E., "is Bettina Rollins, the keeper of law and order in Utopia."

At the end of the hall they stopped before a door on which was written Madame Chairman. A. E. opened it cautiously and they slipped in, standing with their backs tight to the wall. The silence was awful. Kay Mann sat in the president's chair at one end of the table.

"She," explained A. E.'s soto-voice, "is Madame Chairman." At the other end of the table, rolling her eyes heavenward, was Ads Dana.

"She is the chief organizer and carrier-out-of Utopia." A. E. pointed out Dana.

"But how do they govern just sitting here alone?" The Rabbit was becoming bolder.

"It's psychic," A. E. answered him as she opened the door very quietly for them to go out.

"Offices of Utopian executives and leaders are also found in the courthouse here," A. E. began. "This door here is to the office of Rosamond Larmour. She has grown a long gray beard and is thus qualified to act as combination 'Sage and Sybl' in Utopia. The next office is that of Marguerite Harwell, who is our organizer-of-games. The office on your left is Beth Durkee's, who is chief Runner-of-All-Things, and next to her's is June Lipscomb's who compiles statistics."

"What for?" Panky couldn't understand all this. "Statistics for what?" A. E. had almost forgotten Panky.

"Every city has statistics," she said disapprovingly. As she was speaking Marjorie Sparks came out of June's office, whence she had gone with some new material for June to work on.

"Ah," she gurgled upon seeing two strangers, "let me psychoanalyze you!" The Rabbit didn't like the way she rubbed her hands.

"No," he said stoutly and, taking Panky's hand, left the courthouse.

"I don't like this one bit. It's weird," he confided in Panky. But A. E. caught up with them and hurried them off to Utopia's General Store. Manie Stevens was the proprietor and president and she welcomed A. E. and the visitors.

"My latest advertising scheme," she waved toward the show window proudly. "What do you think of it?" There in the window of the store was Kae Field fast asleep. "I'm advertising a special on mattresses," she explained in lieu of the slumbering Kae. She then showed them into her shop. Kay Locke was behind the ice cream counter eating chocolate ice cream with the ladle. Anne Harlan sat on a high stool sadly contemplating a soda.

"They were the nicest proms and such sweet boys," she sighed. The exotic Virginia Bowman, sitting on the next stool, removing her cigarette, calmly replied, "Hell!" and resumed her smoking.

As Manie showed A. E. and her charges about the store, Mary Macon came in. A. E. introduced her to The Rabbit and Panky.

"How do you do?" She thumped herself loudly on the chest. "Have you any problems? I am the Solver-of-All-Problems. At Hollins I solved the great dope-bottle problem." She said this with an air of great finality.

"No," said The Rabbit, astounded.

"Quite all right," Macon assured him and went on about her business.

"And now," said A. E. to The Rabbit and Panky, "now you must come along and see some more of our fair city." Sue Wood collided into them as they were leaving Manie's store. She looked wild-eyed, and raced on. A. E. explained:

"She is the Fritterer-with-Irons-in-the-Fire."

"Oh," said The Rabbit again.

"I think tea would be the thing," A. E. now remarked.

"With cakes?" Panky wanted to know.

"Yes, cakes, but you must wash your paws first, you know. It's a rule here. Elizabeth Coleman is the inspector of hands and ears. She was quite famous at Hollins for her washing and teeth-brushing. She's been known to wash as long as fifteen minutes."

"Just on one part of her?" Panky was incredulous. Then he added with finality, "I shouldn't like that."

After washing Panky's face at Ye Olde Hollins Tea Shoppe, the three found a very pleasant table.

At the next table were Peachie and Nancy. Both were talking at once. Each looked very interested in what she was saying.

"What are they talking about?" Panky asked A. E.

"You're too young," and A. E. dismissed the subject.

As tea and pink cakes were being served, Eloise Goodman, in riding togs, strode in, moving in an atmosphere of distinctly horse.

"The riding instructress," A. E. explained.

"Oh, so you ride here?" The Rabbit remarked politely.

"Oh, no," replied A. E.

"I don't see," began Panky.

"Never mind," interrupted The Rabbit, but he didn't see either.

At this moment a burst of song came into the room. It was Elsbeth. She was the entertainer and strolled from table to table selling cigarettes and singing "Pals."

Clare, who was sitting in deep thought nearby, gazed at the ceiling. Tears came to her eyes. She was undoubtedly thinking sad thoughts and communing silently with herself on the love life she had left behind her.

The Rabbit wiped the pink frosting from Panky's ears and, taking Panky's hand, thanked A. E. very prettily.

"But," he added, "I think it's all very strange."

"Undoubtedly," agreed A. E.

And it was!

Founder's Day, 1933

*N*OT laurel only do we bring to-day,
Nor just the interwoven sheen of bay;
But here we lay our youthful hopes between
The twining circlets of its tender green.
The rising wind has buffeted us clean
Of all the small desires that would demean
Our spirits on this celebrative day,
Or the vision of our founder's dreams betray.

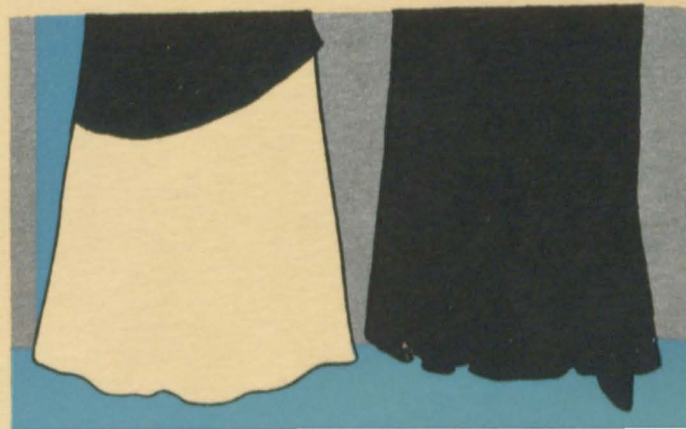

*Now as we pause within this sacred plot,
Deep with the purpose of that vision fraught,
Silent, each heart must render him due praise,
Worthy the man who braved uncharted ways.
Oh, laurel, spread your bloom through all our days!
Oh, wind, blow cleanly through the future's haze!
Imbue us with the courage he has taught;
Inspire us to the battles still unfought.*

The Christmas Pageant

*T*HE MERRIE MASQUERS present annually a Christmas Pageant which was written this year by Hannah Reeves. The scene, based on an actual setting, was laid in a chapel in the Church of Santa Maria, in Aracosli. The Madonna, who is chosen from the student body, was Elizabeth Coleman. Others taking part were: Hannah Reeves, Elizabeth Dawson, Adelaide Dana, Clare Stone, Nancy Ray, Betty Neil, Albert Cocke and members of the play production class.
